The exercise will provide an opportunity for local, state, tribal and federal agencies to explore the coordinated response to a railcar incident that results in a release of hazardous materials, including crude oil, into the Colorado River. The exercise is designed to build relationships between responding and coordinating agencies and provide a forum to discuss the integration of plans that guide environmental response operations in the Yuma area. Exercise objectives focus on operational coordination and communications, building a common operating picture for all involved entities, and ensuring protection of natural and cultural resources.
